I'm interested in earn-to-give startups. I have an idea and can handle the technical side, but am looking for a non-technical counterpart (particularly regarding sales).

Apart from generic salesmanship and a willingness to donate earnings to a top charity, some nice qualifications to have:

- Large network of contacts in healthcare
- Experience in selling medium-sized (~$10k) software
- Healthcare experience (RN, MD etc.)

(See my linkedin for more info about me.)

All participants were pleased with the results, and thought the exercise was worth it. I&amp;#39;d be interested in repeating this with other people; if you would like to participate, let me know. What can I offer?

There are two questions you should ask yourself when deciding whether to offer something.

- Will others find it valuable?
- Is it legal?

If you answered “yes” to both questions, go ahead! If you didn't, try to come up with something else

How much does it cost?

Nothing! Everything is free.

Who is the site for?

The site is aimed at effective altruists—people who want to help others in the most effective ways possible

What data about me do you store?

When you send someone an offer or request, we store only the metadata (e.g., who sent it, when it was sent), not the message itself. When you reply to a message someone sent you regarding an offer or request you placed on the site, your response goes directly to the recipient, so we don't have any record of it at all.

How do I add formatting my offers and requests?

You can use Markdown to add links, bulleted lists, and other formatting to your offers, requests, and profile

How can I help?

Thanks for asking! There are several ways

- Post useful offers. The site works only as long as people are willing to contribute.
- See if you can fulfill any requests. You can be notified of new requests by Twitter or RSS
- Take people up on their offers. Don't be shy about asking for stuff on the site—that's why people put it there!
- Improve the site. If you know Ruby on Rails or front end web development and want to make the site better, grab the code here or send us an e-mail.

What if I don't have anything to offer?

Everybody has something! But if you don't, you're still welcome to use the site

Why not buy and sell goods and services through ordinary markets?

That's a great option for a lot of things. If you need nourishment, visit the supermarket, if you need medical care, see your doctor. But there are several reasons you might consider Skillshare.im instead:

- Friends. You're more likely to build relationships with people you meet on Skillshare.im than with people you have private transactions with
- Non-market goods. Certain things, like career advice or study buddies, are hard to buy. Skillshare.im helps you connect with people who offer these things
- Flexibility. While in theory you could work longer hours and donate the extra money to charity, this often isn't possible. Many people have salaries, or work on schedules set by their employers. Offering your skills for free to other altruists lets you continue doing good after hours
- Tax savings. If you sell your services, some of that money will go to taxes. If you donate the money you earn, you may decrease the amount you owe in taxes, but usually you still pay something.
- Community. By participating in Skillshare.im, you're helping the effective-altruism movement grow.

I've been bootstrapping my company off profits for the last couple of years from £1500 initial investment to ~£100k/yr profit now I can offer advice on how to go about doing something similar

Basically go with what sells, reinvest as much as you can afford, and pick an area with lots of potential avenues to go down that isn't very crowded with competitors Open Source Hardware FTW! It's possible to teach yourself what you need to know as you go along; there is plenty of info on the internet (I don't have an engineering background, but learned 3D printers through trial and error and consulting online fora)

Accountancy/tax advice for Ltd company incorporation in the UK

Sign in to offer

I've been putting off registering a Ltd company for some time now. I'm (perhaps irrationally) weary of high accountants, advisors/consultants fees, and at first glance it doesn't seem that difficult (and I think that it'll probably still take up almost as much of my time finding and liaising with an advisor as filling the various forms myself). You can register with Companies House online, and also deal with pretty much all tax stuff online through HMRC.

However, I'm currently stuck on one issue: I'll need to transfer assets that belong to me (currently set up as a Sole Trader) to the Ltd company when it's incorporated. Is it as simple as creating some area of my spreadsheet called a "Director's Loan Account", crediting it with the value of the assets, writing some simple statement saying I've loaned the assets to the Ltd company, and then gradually getting the company to pay me back through the loan account? Do I have to report any of this to Companies House or HMRC? Or can it wait until my Annual Return and tax returns are done?

Oh, and for share capital, can I issue 10,000 0.1p shares, so as to make transferring shares (to employees) easier down the line? Or is it best to stick with 1 £1 share for now and then issue more when I want to give some to employees.

I should also note that I'm fine with any advice provided being in an unofficial/"off the record" capacity, and accept that if I do go down the DIY route, I bear the sole responsibility for any mistakes. I'll also be interested to hear if anyone knows any stories of people setting up Ltd companies without professional help.

I've helped a couple of friends with their resumes, and they've reported substantial gains in their job searches, apparently as a result of my help. I'd be happy to give you feedback on your resume, rewrite key portions for you, and give you pointers on formatting your resume in LaTeX (especially good if you're applying for a position at a software company).

Anonymous reciprocal feedback

Sign in to request

I've recently engaged in a valuable exercise with three other EAs. Each of us gave every other participant feedback on things they could do to improve themselves. Crucially, the feedback was anonymous (we used Admonymous.com or Google Forms), so there were no incentives to lie or misrepresent one's true opinions. All participants were pleased with the results, and thought the exercise was worth it. I'd be interested in repeating this with other people; if you would like to participate, let me know. (The only restriction is that each participant must know all others sufficiently well to give them with feedback. I think knowing the person solely from online interactions (e.g. on Facebook) might be enough, though.)

EA ProfileAnonymous reciprocal feedback

I've recently engaged in a valuable exercise with three other EAs. Each of us gave every other participant feedback on things they could do to improve themselves. Crucially, the feedback was anonymous (we used Admonymous.com or Google Forms) so there were no incentives to lie or misrepresent one's true opinions. All participants were pleased with the results, and thought the exercise was worth it. I'd be interested in repeating this with other people. If you would like to participate, let me know. (The only restriction is that each participant must know all others sufficiently well to give them non-trivial feedback. I think knowing the person solely from online interactions (e.g. on Facebook) might be enough though.)

Free compliments

Most people would like to receive more (rather than less, sincere) compliments. And few people seem to dislike complimenting others. On the whole, then, it seems desirable to increase the number of compliments people receive. With this in mind, I'm hereby offering to send a personal compliment to anyone that requests it.)

(Please note that this offer is only valid for people I know personally or with whom I've had substantial interactions online. I feel that complimenting someone that I know little or nothing about would be insincere.)

Statistics help

In my opinion, many people in the EA community make sub-optimal decisions because they either don't realize they could apply various statistical tools, or don't know them well enough to use them properly.

I can help with this. If you're doing an EA project and think that you have a problem that would be easier if you understood statistics better, email me and I'll give you feedback. And more in-depth help as my time permits.

For instance, here are some example problems I could help with:

- How trustworthy is this paper's findings?
- What does the academic literature say about this phenomenon?
- I have some data. Can I do anything interesting with it?
- How can I predict some outcome, rigorously and without bias?
- How can I improve this experimental design?
- Should I run an experiment at all if I can afford a sample size of N?
- I just received some information. How strongly should I update on it?

I am building a replacement for the tynchat client that's currently powering the Less Wrong Study Hall (see <https://complice.co/room/lesswrong/>)

The ultimate goal is to have one or more EA Study Halls that help EAs around the world be productive and social at the same time, building the future and building connections.

I've made decent progress with a WebRTC integration, but there are some weird technical problems I haven't solved yet. If anyone has experience with WebRTC, I could use some help in the next few weeks. )

It occurs to me that Information Science is a thing and we have a fair amount of unstructured information lying around that people might want to browse. More specifically I've been thinking about a blog/Facebook aggregator for "what's new", but maybe we also need a better system for managing "what's old". Anyone who knows about digging information out of archives, please get in touch

As one of the people helping the local effective altruism network I'm offering to build a free website for any group across it based on the one I made for EA JNSW for an example, see this template here. We're paying for the domain names and hosting from the network support fund too.

Economies of scale mean that I can build sites quickly and we get a bulk discount for purchasing many domains at once, so it makes sense to offer this to other groups in the network and saves aggregate EA resources. So do say if you'd like a free domain and website now - doing so soon helps us get the bulk discount. Email p@mcintyre.com and togash@gmail.com with the domain you'd prefer and the name of your group. We suggest picking [ea\[location name\].org](#) E.g. eahongkong.org but check what's available at <https://who.is>.

EA Profile

I'm a committed Unitarian/EA. I know a lot about career choices between finance, medicine, and doctoral programs. I think I have a comparative advantage within the EA community on knowledge of these career options. I also know a lot about animal consciousness and cognitive biases and delicious vegan recipes.

Austin Lodging

I can house you for a limited period of time in Austin, TX. Not that there's any EA reason to come here. Oo Note: I will not be here this summer to fulfill this, but I'll be back in the Fall if you want to come here for ACL or SXSW or anything!

Life Sciences Knowledge

I can tutor, just about any life sciences coursework, and provide information on health professions within the US, especially from an EA perspective.

Editing

I took a test once that told me I have perfect grammar. I find mistakes in things very easily, whether it's in an argument, plan, paper, etc. I'm ruthless :)

Listening

I'm happy to listen to personal problems or EA ideas. I can provide as much feedback as you'd like, even if that's just listening.

US University Admissions Advice

If you're reasonably qualified, I bet I can get you into a top-tier US institution!

Prompted by this statement: "Marketing is one of the things the EA community wants to improve at but nobody is really bothering to learn the subject."

I am offering my marketing expertise to any/all EA projects - it is my greatest strength. My background:

First ever undergraduate brand management (marketing) hire by PepsiCo. Launched 15+ new products. ran digital advertising for a $1B brand. worked on television, print, all forms of digital, and out of home advertising as well. Hired, fired, and managed advertising agencies. Have won both academic and professional marketing awards.

Have since performed marketing for some startups on a freelance basis.

A final year Psyc Stats double-major with an interest in EAs, group dynamics, data mining and applications of influence psychology

I have several years experience tutoring adults, have done plenty of creative writing and reviewing (including running a reviewing course) and love public speaking.
I'm happy to share my experience in these areas with anyone interested. Or just contact me to chat.

 Profile
type: largeIntroductory Stats & Psyc Tutoring

If you're looking for some tutoring in first or second year statistics or psychology, I can help you. I've tutored plenty of tertiary students in these areas, including a couple who didn't know basics like multiplying negative numbers or what a power was, so whatever stage you're at, don't hesitate to contact me! We can tutor via Skype in the (highly likely) event that you don't live in Chch, NZ.

 Profile
type: largePublic Speaking/Presentation Feedback

If you've got a presentation coming up and want some feedback on it, flick me a message. I've done tons of presentations, from debating to presenting statistical research to improv drama, and have helped several friends become more confident and clear. This would likely have to be done via Skype.

I've been bootstrapping my company off profits for the last couple of years - from £1500 in investment to £100k/yr profit now. I can offer advice on how to go about doing something similar.

Basically go with what sells, reinvest as much as you can afford, and pick an area with lots of potential avenues to go down that isn't very crowded with competitors. Open Source Hardware FTW. It's possible to teach yourself what you need to know as you go along, there's plenty of info on the internet, don't have an engineering background, but learned 3D printers through trial and error and consulting online fora)

Accountancy/tax advice for Ltd company incorporation in the UK

I've been putting off registering a Ltd company for some time now, I'm (perhaps irrationally) weary of high accountants, advisors, consultants fees, and at first glance it doesn't seem that difficult (and I think that it probably still take up almost as much of my time finding and dealing with an advisor as filing the various forms myself). You can register with Companies House online, and also deal with pretty much all tax stuff online through HMRC.

However, I'm currently stuck on one issue. I need to transfer assets that belong to me (currently set up as a Sole Trader) to the Ltd company when it's incorporated. Is it as simple as creating some area of my spreadsheet called a Directors Loan Account, crediting it with the value of the assets, writing some simple statement saying we loaned the assets to the Ltd company, and then gradually getting the company to pay me back through the loan account? Do I have to report any of this to Companies House or HMRC? Or can I wait until my Annual Return and tax returns are done?

Oh, and for share capital, can I issue 10,000 0.1p shares, so as to make transferring shares (to employees) easier down the line? Or is it best to stick with 1 £1 share for now, and then issue more when I want to give some to employees.

I should also note that I'm fine with any advice provided being in an "unofficial" off the record capacity, and accept that I'll do go down the D.Y. route, bear the sole responsibility for any mistakes. I also be interested to hear if anyone knows any stories of people setting up Ltd companies without professional help.

In my opinion many people in the EA community make sub-optimal decisions because they either don't realize they could apply various statistical tools, or don't know them well enough to use them properly

I can help with this. If you're doing an EA project and think that you have a problem that would be easier if you understood statistics better, email me and I'll give you feedback. And more in-depth help as my time permits

- What does the academic literature say about this phenomenon?
- I have some data. Can I do anything interesting with it?
- How can I predict some outcome, rigorously and without bias?
- How can I improve this experimental design?
- Should I run an experiment at all if I can afford a sample size of N?

Guidance for learning or improving at programming

I've helped a couple people in the past learn how to program — some of them went on to make careers out of it. I'm a ycombinator alum with lots of programming experience.

Overall I recommend coming up with a project and trying to build it.

The project can be anything — something you think is interesting or fun or useful, or if you're brand new to programming, it can be a dumb version of something you'd eventually like to build.

I can help you come up with a project if you don't already have one picked out. I can also help pick a programming language and library or framework (if one applies) that makes sense for what you're trying to do.

Trying to build a particular project will force you to confront things you need to learn. Whenever you get stuck (use Google or me) to figure out a way. After you're done, take on a harder project. If you repeat the process continually, you'll end up knowing how to program.

If there's background material that's important to understand, I'll help guide you toward learning it. I won't have much time to dedicate personally, but I will hopefully be able to point you toward the right resources at the right moments.

A friend of mine and me will be spending some time translating EA material into Spanish over the next weeks. If there is any document or video that you would like me to translate, please get in touch. So far the only EA material available in Spanish is Singer's TED talk, Singer's book The Life You Can Save, and a couple of GiveWell blog posts (still unpublished).

Saving Monthly Income

Right now I'm a salesperson for TV, internet, and home automation, security. I have very mixed feelings about sales because I highly value integrity, however I have seen my products save people over $300 a month between all 3. My sales suffer though because I only sign up those who will actually benefit from what I can offer. I also try and go the extra step by being the most knowledgeable about our products and by helping my customers deal with the service providers throughout their contract. If you guys are paying over $130 a month for both tv & internet I can usually get it lower for longer. If you're in my area or have a friend that is my number is 512-635-4129. If my customers don't benefit from what I can do I leave them alone. Just trying to help (a truism always). I have references from customers that will vouch for me.

I'm new to effective altruism. Right now I'm not very effective because I spend almost all my time reading about it.

Website Consultation

I have 10 years experience creating websites. My focus is on easy to use WordPress sites. If you plan to build a website, I can explain to you what the most cost effective solutions are. If you already have a website, I can review it for security and usability in order to optimise it in these areas.
